Buster Bear and had called Buster a He knew all about gains. He knew coward it was for the purpose of making Buster very very nugry. Peter was not in the least disappointed. Oh, No one likes to be called a coward, least of all any one as bur and strong as Ruster Bear. He grew so angry that his rage was a frightful thing to see. I he could have got hold of Peter then Peter's life would that is one reason that being called a not have been worth a kick of his long hindlegs. But be couldn't catch Peter. Buster Bear had a very bad day and finally Peter made his way home to the dear Old Brier Patch very west content with the result of his call.

You see, said Peter to anxious little Mrs. Peter, "he is so angry at the idea that a little fellow like me should dare call him a coward that he won't get over it for some time. I am going to pass the word along to everybody else to call him a coward whenever they meet him, and so keep him angry Then perhaps if he happens to run across that hunter who is making life so hard for some of us these days he will be too angry to be afraid and will give that hunter a fright."

Now Buster Bear knew well enough could be the matter with Buster Bear, buildings adjacent were damaged.

A Bank Account Spells Spunk

manhort hore

By E. K. Wooley.

"If I were an employer, I'd be tickled to death to see my employees prosper," remarked my friend the Business Woman

But there are few employers of that stripe." "Now, if I was hiring a lot of people, I'd feel it would be to my credit if they were a plump and happy looking lot. I'd be patting myself on the shoulder if they were able to buy their own homes. I'd feel proud if any of 'em could keep an automobile. And if I discovered that some of them were smart enough to earn what I paid them and could get commissions outside of my business, I'd swell with pride to think I was smart enough to pick such good material to work for me.

"But is that the way most of these here employers look at the game? Not so's you could notice it." My friend the Business Woman paused to snort with indignation.

'Why this trend of thought?" I mildly queried.

"You know Bertha Smithson, don't you?" she asked.

I nodded assent. "Mighty bright girl."

'She is that! And she's worth all kinds of money to the old curmudgeon who hired her. But she's never had a raise unless she fought for it, and she never got what she was worth. I think Bertha would have struck out independently long before she did, but she has an invalid sister to support and pay doctor bills for, so she's been rather timid.

"About a year ago she got a chance to make some money outside of the business. She didn't let down in her regular work at all simply put on a little steam to do the other work. It paid her

Well, Bertha got caught up on the doctor's bills, moved into a better neighborhood, bought a new dress now and then and got some luxuries for her sick sister. Also, she began to look much better picked up in flesh and had more of an air of assurance.

"Meantime Bertha's employer had been taking notice." "Fell in love with her and married her, eh?" In inferred.

"Hey! Not on your life!" exploded my friend the Business Woman, "He called her on the carpet. Said she'd have to cut out everything but the work she was doing for him if she expected to stay in his employ. Said as long as he hired her her services belonged to him, in or out of business hours.

"Bertha meekly inquired if he would make it worth her while, of the postoffice at Dearborn, Texas, in a salary way, to give all her time and thoughts to the firm. He last November, he appropriated all the responded to that by saying she was getting all she was worth. registered mail and the greater part Whereupon Bertha came back by saying that apparently his opinion of her worth didn't jibe with hers and she guessed she could get along without him fully as well as he could get along without her, since he had such a poor opinion of her. You see, Bertha's spunk developed

"So Bertha made up her final report, closed her desk and went away from there. Now she's opened a little office of her own and is making three times as much money as she did before:

"There's nothing like a bank account to develop spunk," I opined.

"And the person without spunk doesn't amount to much," stated my friend the Business Woman. "But a lot of these men who hand scientific marketing of their crops" was out salaries and therefore hold our bread and butter in the hollow of advocated by E. R. Kone.
